

TWIGG SAYS 'FRIEND' WRECKED HIS HOME

Wife Cared More for Aspinall's Little Finger Than All of Him.

INSISTED ON DIVORCE

Practically Sold House Over Head, Sending Him to Furnished Room.

Opposing the application of Mrs. Rao S. S. Twigg of 1030 East Seventeenth street, Flatbush for $300 a month alimony pending trial of her suit for separation, Charles E. Twigg, a printing salesman, 36, declared in an affidavit filed with Supreme Court Justice Kapper in Brooklyn that his home had been broken up by Walter H. Aspinwall, a Flatbush neighbor and friend. "He had been an old neighbor of ours and he and his wife had been our intimate friends for years," said Twigg. "An attachment developed between him and my wife. I noticed it and Mrs. Aspinwall noticed it. It continued for a long time. "Then, in December, 1920, Mrs. Aspinwall died. My wife threw all restraints to the winds. The Aspinwalls lived a short distance from me. A day or so after the death of his wife Aspinwall took sick. My wife went to his house and stayed with him continually for a month or more. She slept in the same room with him. "I complained about this. I told her it was not a proper thing for her to do. I said, 'Walter has plenty of money. He can well afford to hire trained nurses who can take better care of him than you can.' She replied, 'Walter would die if any one else took care of him.' She said, besides, she cared more for his little finger than for my whole body."

Wife Invites Him to Go.

In March last, said Twigg, his wife remarked it was impossible for them to live together "under any circumstances." He quotes her as saying, "I am going to sell the house as soon as I can. Of course, if you want to stay until the house is sold, you may, but at that time we will have to separate anyhow, and I think it will be just as well if you go now."

her obtain a divorce. "I want to get rid of you in every way," she is declared to have said. "The only way for us to get a divorce. I want quick action. If I go West it will take a long time." She was determined he should go, he said, and so he rented a furnished room, but before he left she took sick and so he waited. "During this time, Walter Aspinwall came to the house everyday. Without saying a word to me, he would go directly upstairs to my wife's room and would close the door and they would be together for a long time."

Mrs. Twigg, he said, again broached divorce. "I told her I did not see how I could do as she asked. I said I had lived all these years without any scandal, and I was afraid if I should do a thing of that kind how it might interfere with my relations with the boy (his 14 year old son), and that I did not want to take such a risk." But Mrs. Twigg said she had seen a lawyer, he added, "and the lawyer told her everything could be arranged so I would not have to do anything that might embarrass me—just follow instructions." Mrs. Twigg's present lawyer was not the man, he added.

Twigg Leaves Home.

"The question of telling the boy that I was leaving came up. I told her I thought under the circumstances the boy ought to know I was leaving, not because I wished it but because she had asked me to do so. She said: 'That is right. I will tell him.' We called the boy in and she told him his father was leaving because she asked him to. The next day I left." Twigg added that he thereafter notified his wife he could not give her the divorce as suggested. Mrs. Twigg declared her husband's story was untrue. She had never been more than friendly with Aspinwall, she said. It was her husband who had asked her to assist Aspinwall. When her husband suggested that Aspinwall, who had a young daughter, live in the Twigg home she refused to consent to that proposal. She never discussed or suggested a divorce, she said. Trouble arose when she demanded that her husband support her properly. Then he left.

Mrs. Twigg said that since her marriage in 1902 her husband had borrowed in all $5,000 from her. He married her, she added, for the sole purpose of getting possession of her money and property. He caused her "great mental anguish and physical suffering," she added, by maliciously and unjustly suing Aspinwall for alienation of affection. Her husband's income, she said, was $5,000 a year. He left her last March. Conflicting statements as to Twigg's income led Justice Kapper to appoint a referee to take the testimony of the officers of his printing firm at 57 Warren street.

Neither Mrs. Twigg, her lawyer, James M. Flawcett, or her husband's lawyer, Robert H. Elder, would discuss the case.

CLAN RULE IS LAW OF NEDHAM ESTATE

Surrogate's Referee Decides 'Irregular Regularity' by Executor.

$30,000 MUST BE DIVIDED

Sister-in-Law of Cement Company Head Victorious in Demand for Accounting.

The doctrine that every man is presumed to know the law will require Henry Nedham Nedham, president of the New Jersey Portland Cement Company, to include among the assets of the estate of his father, Thomas Stanley Nedham, $30,000 which the latter advanced to him in his lifetime for the general good of the cement company. In a report to Surrogate Cochran yesterday, Philip J. Sinnott, referee, recommended that Mr. Nedham be charged with the amount on the ground that he should have recognized that it was part of the estate of which he was executor, even if no court ever told him so. In a memorandum attached to his report, Mr. Sinnott says of Mr. Nedham's discharge of his executorship: "It seems to have been conducted the affairs of the estate on a conception of his duties based on tribal custom rather than on the law. As the head of the family—sometimes referred to as the Clan Nedham—he arrogated to himself the management of the estate and the use of its securities and funds with strict regard to what a chief should do for the welfare of all, but in disregard of law. His father, the testator, had the utmost confidence in his business ability, and his sisters to a day are in entire accord with his ideas of irregular regularity, and are not at all pleased that a contestant, in fighting for her rights, is fighting for their rights also."

The contestant who takes exception to Mr. Nedham's methods of executorship is his sister-in-law, Mrs. Emily Cromwell Nedham, the widow of his brother Thomas. The referee recommends that she receive a fourth of the estate, including a fourth of the $30,000 that was advanced to the executor before his father's death.

MUCH SMOKE, LITTLE FIRE, ON SHIP IN HARBOR

Panhandle State Sails After Fireboats Quench Blaze.

As the United States liner Panhandle State passed the Battery, outward bound, yesterday afternoon, something went wrong with an oil feed line in the fireroom. Instantly flames and clouds of thick, black smoke shot up through the ventilators and enveloped the vessel amidships.

As observers at the Battery peering through the murky weather, it seemed that the whole ship was aflame. Police-Lieut. Mulhall, of Harbor A, and "Buck" O'Neill, the Battery lifesaver, rushed out two fireboats and the police boat John F. Hyman. The fire, however, gained little headway, and the crew and the men of the fireboats Gaynor and New Yorker soon had it extinguished. After about three-quarters of an hour the liner proceeded on her way to Plymouth, Boulogne and London. She has on board only eighteen passengers. Last spring a fire which started in the fireroom of the ship ignited an oil tank. The oil blazed for eight hours.
